NOW READY (February 1st, 1853), Part IV., Price 3s. 6d.

SIR JOHN HAWKINS'S

GENERAL HISTORY

OF

THE SCIENCE AND PRACTICE OF MUSIC.

It is intended to issue the work in Ten Parts, price 3s. 6d. each. The whole of the original text will be printed in its integrity; together with the Illustrative Woodcuts of Instruments, &c. (for which more than 200 Woodcuts have been engraved); the whole of the Musical Examples in the various ancient and modern notations; and the fac-simile Examples of old Manuscripts.

In the present age, when public attention is so extensively directed towards the study and practice of Music, it has been thought that a new edition of Sir John Hawkins's valuable History of the Science and Practice of Music would prove peculiarly acceptable, as being by far the best history of the Art extant.

In this delightful book, authorities have been consulted and brought together from various libraries and museums, with a diligence in research, and a solicitude almost affectionate in their collection and arrangement, forming together a mass of the most curious and entertaining information upon a subject the most enchanting. No pains have been spared to render the work complete. It bears evidence of being a labour of love; of being one of those tasks, which are none to the compiler,—but a delight. The evident pleasure he takes in his work, reflects itself upon the reader; rendering it light and agreeable,—nothing wearisome, however long and minute. There is evidence of toil, but the perusal is not toilsome; for the author's toil is so willingly undertaken, and so enjoyingly pursued, that the effect upon the reader is unalloyed enjoyment. No amount of care has been deemed too much; and the reader feels grateful for being spared the trouble of seeking, while he luxuriously profits by the result. He sits in his arm-chair, comfortably ruminating the stores of knowledge which have been culled for him from various wide-spread sources, by patient, worthy Sir John; who,—the beauty of it is,—has evidently had as much gratification in gathering the materials for the feast, as the reader finds from the feast itself. Besides the information contained in the book, there is abundance of amusing reading. It was a favorite with Charles Lamb, who, though no musical authority, was an eminent literary one, of unsurpassed refined taste and high judgment. In the shape of notes, there is a fund of anecdote, and a large amount of incidental miscellaneous matter, scattered through the work, that pleasantly relieve the graver main theme. Anything entertaining, that can by possibility be linked on to the subject of music, is easily and chattily introduced; as though the author and his reader were indulging in a cheerful gossip by the way. We have, in quaint succession, such things as that romantic love-passage of Giuffredo Rudello, the troubadour poet; or that wondrous account of the Moorish Admirable Crichton, Alpharabius,—which is like a page out of the 'Arabian Nights;' or that naïve detail of bluff King Harry's fancy for my Lord Cardinal's minstrels, and of his setting off with them for a certain nobleman's house where was a shrine to which he had vowed a pilgrimage, and where he spent the night in dancing to the sound of the minstrels' playing.

In conclusion, it may be said, that the present Edition is what a new one by Sir John Hawkins himself would have been; since all the additional manuscript notes which adorn the author's own copy in the British Museum, are inserted in this Edition now presented to the public.

It has been determined not to increase the price of the work by the addition of the medallion Portraits of Musical Composers, which were in the original edition; but to print them in a supplementary volume which may be purchased optionally. They consist of upwards of sixty portraits; and J. A. Novello has been fortunate enough to obtain the original copper-plates engraved for the quarto edition.

J. Alfred Novello respectfully invites his musical friends to aid him in his arduous undertaking by sending their names as subscribers, stating whether they would receive their copies in parts as they appear, or when the work is completed.
